

Answers to Chris Malloy worksheet:

1. Chris grew up about a ½ mile from the Coast of Southern California. He enjoyed fishing, horses, kick the can, surfing and rodeos.
2. When someone starts to lose focus, they lose sight of their goals. They no longer stick to who they want to be. Drugs become more important. Someone who is addicted to drugs needs the drug before anything else.
3. Your friends are your role models, and that is the way it is. It's very hard to not go along with your friends and what they want to do. So if your friends use drugs, it will be hard to be different from them. It's possible, but more difficult. If you chose friends that chose a natural high over drugs, it will be safer for you. You will not get caught at parties with friends that are drinking or using drugs. Unfortunately, our law uses guilt by association when you are under age. Even if you are not using, you can still face charges or you may be in a car with someone that is using.
4. Chris is interested in surfing (although he was injured in 1997), making films, designing clothing for surfers, and he likes big waves.

Part 2- He turned his interest into a career by learning to film great surfers, and by designing surf wear such as wet suits and shorts for Patagonia.

5. Chris's natural high is being in the ocean with his friends and family.
